Perfect Education for Me

I think that the education system shouldn't evolve, but be revolutionized. It should also be customized for each student's abilities. The teaching and learning should be non-formal rather than formal with a safe environment where teenagers can express themselves freely without any fears. Therefore, the following is just a rough sketch of how I think a week of school should look like:

On Monday, they should study literature and a second foreign language of their choice in class of 7-10 children. Tuesdays ought to be for humanities. I think an interesting way to teach them History, for example, would be to have them to stage a play every week about a certain subject or important people. Wednesdays are for science and nature. Experiments, trips, anything that can help them learn about the natural environment and how to protect and preserve it: theory as well as practice. On Thursdays they should learn about people. All about relationships, human minds, socializing and public speaking abilities. On Fridays they should practice a sport/physical activity of their choice. Saturdays are for arts and creativity. Lastly, Sundays should be about happiness and doing what makes them happy.
